„If he would ever get married?“

My son Murat is 46 years old. We moved to Germany from Turkey as foreign workers when he was 4. He is my only child. I haven't seen his father for years. Today, I am living in Turkey with my pension granted from Germany – all in all, I had worked hard a life time long in Germany. As I didn't have to work anymore, I wanted to move back home.

„He is at home, anywhere around the world“

My dear Murat stayed in Germany. Indeed, I had hoped that he would have returned to Turkey with me. On the other hand, I can understand him as well. He grew up in Germany and differing from all the other children of foreign workers, he speaks perfect German and Turkish and also English and I don't know how many others too. He is clever, but he doesn't know really what he should do with his life. He started studying again a couple of years ago and he is earning his life. He always finds a job. Sometimes he works in England too.

„Why is he still alone?“

He is a nice man. He is taking care of me every time that I am in Germany and he takes me to the doctors. But it makes me sad to see him so lonely. He still doesn't have children and is not married at all! Earlier I had asked him again and again when he would bring a woman home finally, or when he planned to marry. They all ended up in fights but now it is ok somehow.

„He has many good friends“

Actually I have never seen him together with a woman. He has many good friends, also women, but I have never noticed him, so properly like a man being together with a woman. He is always going into these groups. I believe, there are only men, like him, who are not together with women. I can understand it in a way; I am also mostly fond of being together with my neighbours and my friends. But I was once married and have a child. But Murat – he is somehow different.
